

Organising an event; the task is to decide on having an indoor or outdoor cinema this Saturday.

Person 1: Ok, so we must plan the cinema evening for next Saturday. It would be great to set it up outdoors, weather permitting that is! What do you think?

Person 2: Yes, I couldn't agree more but it's a bit risky. It has been pouring down all week and the ground is still very wet. Perhaps we'd better plan for an indoor event?

Person 1: Well, I checked the weather forecast and it's expected to brighten up by Friday evening. If it's slightly chilly we could provide some blankets and even some hot drinks, couldn't we?

Person 2: Yes, I suppose so. We can make the call on Saturday morning, which will give us ample time to prepare for either option. Is that okay with you?

Person 1: Sounds good. Let's go through the "check list": it's going to be a comedy "x"

Person 2: Oh really! Again! We had a comedy last time and it kind of bombed! It wasn't very funny, and a lot of people left in the middle. Don't you remember?

Person 1: Ahh, that's right, it was an absolute disaster and I had to deal with loads of disgruntled people asking for a refund. It was a bad decision to play that movie. Can you suggest something else?

Person 2: How about a family movie, they normally suit everyone, wouldn't you agree?

Person 1: You have a point there, ok let's show one of the latest family movies. Now, with regards to food and drinks... What are your views?

Person 2: How about we set up a little tuck shop with sweets, cold and hot drinks, and a popcorn machine? How do you like that idea?

Person 1: Sounds perfect. If we had it outdoors, we could put some cosy cushions on the ground and people could also bring their own camping chairs. We can put some outdoor lights around to give a nice atmosphere. Can you visualise that?

Person 2: Yes, it's going to be great! On another note, have you thought about the admission charge?

Person 1: Yes, how about €4 per adult and €2 per child over 5? How does that sound?

Person 2: Sounds great. I will organise the flyer, so just to recap on everything to be included on it; weather permitting cinema will be held outdoors, it's a family movie, the charge for adults is €4 and €2 for children over five years of age, I'll mention that refreshments are available. Have I missed anything?

Person 1: Yes, mention that they can bring their own camping chair for the outdoors cinema. I think that's it.

Person 2: Let's cross our fingers and wish for a glorious day!
